

Political

This is the statue of a priest-king.

It is political by showing the dominating ruler. His ornate decoration shows him to be a person of significance and conveys the king to be a ruler of luxury.

Economic

This is a figurine of an ox-drawn cart.

It is economic because it shows the usage of animal labor for moving agricultural goods. In addition, it shows how there was a movement of grains and materials in the region.

Religious

This is a burial of a Man, which was excavated quite recently.

It is religious because it shows insight on how burial took place during the Indus civilization. Clearly the person is just buried, a ritual probably took place, and no items are found with the corpus.

Social

This is a statue of a woman carrying her small infant.

This shows social interaction in the Indus civilization because it shows that women are the ones to care for infants, therefore taking a large amount of time caring for children.
