

Internet

True or False:

Packets being sent over the Internet can be arbitrarily large.

All packets will follow the same fastest path through the network.

Packets can be received out of order without the message being corrupted.

ISPs are able to control information being sent over the internet.

If a DNS server goes down, your browser will no longer be able to load google.com.