I love that the reload bar stays visible while you're refreshing, really ups the usability!

However, the spinner and copy aren't decently vertical aligned :)

Copy should go up 2px, and the spinner should go down 4 or 5 pixels.

After just a few weeks with Tweetie 2, I now find myself trying to pull-down-the-list-to-refresh in Mail.

That's the sign of an apt gesture, I think.

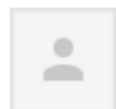

Loren Brichter

10/1/09 ☆

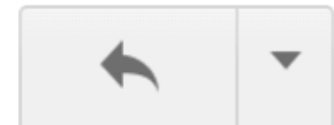

to John ▾

I've been hearing that a lot recently. I'd be delighted if Apple ripped it off.

John Gruber

10/2/09 ☆

to me ▾

I think the genius of the gesture is that that's where the new messages would be (above the existing top-most one, under the header bar) if there are any there. It's spatial.

Thanks to you, I just tried to refresh my inbox by pulling the list down and releasing it. I hate it when you do things better than Apple.

First we had Twitter Lists. Then Facebook Friends lists. Then smart lists. And now, Facebook is introducing Interest lists as a way to push relevant content up in the increasingly cluttered news feed.

Facebook users will be able to subscribe to broadly defined Interest lists, such as sports, or more specific ones, like NFL football. The lists are created by users, and are comprised of public-figure profiles and pages.

Facebook says this is a separate @Magnuson Yep. Taxi Magic. Normally they're fine, this time was a true bummer. I won't catalogue the lengthy badness. Moved on! Hm, cabulous.

Magnuson

@crystal If you're referring to the app Taxi Magic, you should give Cabulous a try

crystal

The rain laden journey complete with suitable multi delays was far more magical than the (failed) taxi magic.

My favorite thing is when people spend 10x more time on a custom pull to refresh rather than features
