Revenge attack by stone-throwing baboons

Stone-throwing baboons waited three days for revenge on the side of a mountain road in Saudi Arabia to take revenge on a motorist who had killed one of their group.

After finally spotting the car responsible for the death, one of the apes screamed out a signal for the rest to attack, provoking a frenzied bout of stone throwing.

The baboons then ripped out the windscreen of the car.

The driver managed to escape the attack, which took place on the same stretch of road, between Mecca and Taif, where the baboon had been run down.

Story filed: 11:07 Saturday 9th December 2000

Are you interested in this type of story?
If you're an Orange customer you can follow this subject on your phone. Find out how.

Add subjects

Find out how to get a personal news service
The Orange web and WAP sites feature all the news and information that's on Ananova - plus much more. You can choose from thousands of subjects to get the news that matters to you. Find out more at orange.co.uk/today

Check for more on:
Baboons
Animal tales
Saudi Arabia
World