

Acknowledgements and Disclaimers

This Report is the culmination of effort over 24 months by Carnegie Mellon researchers and their associates, with significant contributions from the dozens of international participants in the Workshops. In attendance were participants from over 25 countries, spanning all the regions of world.

Information and Communications Technology (ICT) and Sustainable Development (SD) are themselves vast fields, let alone their intersection, and thus this report does not claim to be exhaustive. We have, however, attempted to capture a broad consensus amongst researchers, development professionals, and decision-makers on the challenges and possible role for ICT in sustainable development.

Support for the Workshops came from the following agencies/organizations:

- US National Science Foundation (NSF) – Grant Number IIS-0303541
- United Nations (UN)
- World Bank (WB)
- Development Gateway
- National Institute of Advanced Studies (NIAS)
- Center for Development of Advanced Computing (CDAC)
- Govt. of India (through its Ministries, Departments and Agencies)
- ICT Industry (Microsoft; IBM; HP Labs (India); Sun Microsystems)

The Workshops and analysis on which this report is based would not have been possible without the help of numerous individuals, including those at various partnering and sponsoring organizations:

Rita Colwell, Peter Freeman, Valerie Gregg, Larry Brandt, Richard Lempert [National Science Foundation]; Nitin Desai, JoAnne DiSano, Kui-Nang Mak, J. Gururaja, Friedrich Soltau [United Nations]; Mohamed Muhsin, Carlos Braga, Jocelyne Albert, Sudhakar Kaveeshwar, Vivek Chaudhry, Reva Eskinazi, Oleg Petrov [World Bank]; K. K. Jaswal (MCIT), S. Ramakrishnan (CDAC), V. S. Ramamurthy (DST), R. Natarajan (AICTE), R. A. Mashelkar (CSIR) [Govt. of India Departments and Agencies]; Raveesh Gupta, P. Anandan [Microsoft]; Uday Shukla, M. Ganesh [IBM]; S. Ramani [HP Labs (India)]; Ganesh Mahabala [Sun Microsystems]; Mark Kamlet, Walt Schearer, M. Bernardine Dias, Anshu Bharadwaj, Shalini Vajjhala, Anita Connelly, Vivian Lee, Helen Higgins, Heather Pons [Carnegie Mellon University]; Tina Joseph, Maitreyee S. Chakravarty, S. Srinivas, S. Swarna, K. Nagarathna, and numerous student volunteers [IISc]; (late) Raja Ramanna, Roddam Narasimha, S. Rajagopal, M. K. Paul, V. A. Joseph [NIAS]; Robin King [Georgetown University]; B. R.
