david selected:
For most Americans the 9/11 bombings were a tragedy; for neoconservatives bent on invading Iraq they were also an opportunity, providing what david zarefsky calls a kinetic moment.
The administration's rhetoric fueled and channeled the fury already aroused by the attacks themselves

George freshmen have a lot of expectations for the so-called "best years of their life". I left home for my first year at a big state university with the same naive ideas. I was going to meet new friends, mature into an independent woman, and most importantly, escape the monotony of life in my middle-class, middle-of-nowhere past. The most sensational thing to happen in my teenage bubbling existence was the marriage of my parents, which I described in the essay as the catalyst for my own coming-of-age story. Moving story with a surprise ending. Shows that you can sometimes grow up without leaving home. The language needs work throughout.
