with special guest....

TODD SEDANO

Director, Software Engineering Masters Program
Carnegie Mellon West
(and Alum!)

SCS CAREER SEMINAR “A Don’t Miss Event”
Friday, February 22, 2008 at 12:00 noon
Mauldin Auditorium (Room 1305), Newell-Simon Hall

Abstract: We all want to be successful, but what does success look like? Is it getting on the cover of Wired? Is it making it big with an IPO? After working in industry for ten years, Todd will address what he’s learned in the trenches as a software engineer and what it means to be successful.

Bio: Todd Sedano is the Director of Software Engineering masters program at Carnegie Mellon’s campus in Silicon Valley. Todd completed the undergraduate SCS curriculum in three years with a perfect 4.0 -- If you want education tips, he’ll be available after the talk. After two years at the Artificial Intelligence group at JPL, he returned and finished his masters in Software Engineering. Since then, he’s worked at software development companies, internet consulting firms, a start-up, and his alma mater.
