15110 ACADEMIC INTEGRITY POLICY

It is expected that you will complete each assignment on your own, and each answer you submit represents your own work and not someone else's work, in full or in part. Do not give answers to another student or receive answers from another student. In other words, do your own work and let others do their own work.

In this course, assignments are not to be done in groups. And this policy applies after you have finished the course; do not give answers to students taking this course or similar courses in the future (unless you become an instructor of this course). You can talk about the assignments with your peers or a TA in order to understand what a problem is asking, but when you develop your solution, it should be YOURS alone. Go to a separate quiet area without other students and write your own answers so that you don't end up copying someone else's answers. If you are having trouble coming up with a correct answer, your own answer, even if it is incorrect, is much better than someone else's that you have not come up yourself. In this way, we can identify areas where you are having trouble, and we can give you help to understand these harder concepts. If you are having trouble keeping up with the workload due to personal issues, your best action is to see your instructor rather than copy someone else's work. Your instructor may be able to provide a short-term accommodation depending on the situation and will be very happy to assist.

During quizzes and exams, your work must be your own with no communication between you and others (except course staff) during the exams, and you may not use any unauthorized materials during the exam.

Students who violate any part of this policy can be charged with academic dishonesty without warning, which may result in a penalty from a deduction of a letter grade up to automatic failure in this course and possible expulsion from Carnegie Mellon University. You should review the official University Code for more information.
